KIRKLAND, Wash., Jan. 19 /PRNewswire/ -- The best time to buy long term care insurance is not retirement age but in one's 50's, 40's, or 30's, according to LTC Financial Partners LLC, the nation's most experienced long term care insurance brokerage. Why?

1. Get a policy before you can't. "Thousands of Americans are turned down for long term care insurance every year," says Truesdell. "They put off applying until health problems arise, when they may be uninsurable. That's like waiting until you have an accident to apply for auto insurance."

2. Save a bundle on premiums. "When you are young and healthy, rates are really low. If you wait 7 or 8 years, you may find that rates for a person your age have doubled." The younger you are when you lock in a rate, the less you'll pay overall, Truesdell emphasizes. "While insurance companies reserve the right to adjust rates for policies after they are purchased, the more reputable carriers -- which our organization represents -- maintain rate stability as covered individuals age."

3. Qualify for a Good Health Discount. "You could save 10% to 20% year after year if you are in good shape when you apply. This is in addition to the savings you enjoy if you buy when you are younger." The chances of qualifying for a Good Health Discount go down with age, Truesdell points out. "At 30 or under, a majority of applicants qualify; beyond 70, less than 20% do."

4. Protect your nest egg and lifestyle. "As more people live into their 80's, 90's, and beyond 100, long term health issues become more likely," Truesdell points out, and the resulting bills can quickly deplete one's life savings. "With long term care protection in place, you can live long and enjoy your prosperity without fear of sudden poverty."

5. Let Uncle Sam pick up more of the tab. "Tax deductions for LTC
